Fred Schmierer Heads Legion

The November meeting of the Carbon branch of the Canadian Legion was held in the Legion Hall Monday evening, November 21, and 18 members were present to nominate and elect officers for 1950. Regular business was first discussed and a number of matters dealt with. The Poppy Day netted $121.57 and this sum will go into the Disabled Veterans Fund. A vote of thanks was made to Padre J.W. Way for the manner in which he arranged for the service on Memorial Day, and the secretary-treasurer was also instructed to write the Carbon Students' Union thanking them for their invaluable assistance in selling of poppies on November 5.

The latter part of the meeting was devoted to nominating and election of officers, with the following being returned to office: President, Fred Schmierer; Vice-President, Russell Snell; Secretary-Treasurer, Jack Barr; Executive Committee—Don Martin, Doug Frowse, Charlie Cave, Johnny Buchner and Morris Switzer.

Installation of officers will take place at the December meeting.

The United Nations

BETWEEN THE FIRST AND SECOND WORLD WARS the League of Nations was organized and later disbanded. It was recognized as a great and commendable effort to join the nations of the world together for the purpose of preserving the peace and of fostering progress in many matters of international concern, and its failure was a blow to many people who sincerely believed that such an organization could accomplish the objectives set out for it. There were a number of reasons why it did not succeed. One of these was that the debates, while they were chaired on by very able and learned orators, were on a plane too high to permit the open discussion of international misunderstandings and practical problems of the times. The fact that the United Nations did not join the League of Nations was also an important factor in its failure to survive.

Disputes Have Been Aired

In spite of the fact that the first effort of creating a world organization had not been notably successful, the need for such a body to settle international problems was clearly indicated at the end of the last war. Out of this need grew the United Nations, formed with many of the same objectives as the League of Nations, but along more practical lines and with none of the powerful nations declining membership. While the future of the United Nations Organization cannot be predicted, it has proved a successful ground upon which to air international differences and to settle disputes by discussion rather than by force. Whether it can continue to meet all the tests to which it may be put remains to be seen, but it is without doubt a very important step forward along the way to world government.

Sees Need For World Body

Speaking recently on this subject, Hon. Paul Martin, Minister of Health, and second in command of the Canadian delegation to the United Nations assembly at Lake Success, New York, expressed the opinion that a world organization is now inevitable and that if the United Nations were broken up, some other such world body would be created to take its place. Comparing the U.N. to the League of Nations, Mr. Martin said: "This time we are more realistic, we are more conscious of the difficulties. It is to be hoped that the United Nations may continue to function effectively and that it will grow, in time, to assume the form of a world government. If it should fail to do this, it will at least stand as another step toward the goal of complete international co-operation and understanding."

"Oh, no," replied the waitress. "We close at 6 o'clock."

After the wedding ceremony the kindly old vicar eyed the shy bridegroom very kindly. "Well, my friend," he said, "here is your lawful wedded wife."

The young man grew purple and shuffled his feet as he turned to his bride and murmured: "Pleased to meet you."

Caller: "Why do you keep that dog in its box on your desk?"
Manager: "Because it's a novelty to have something opening its mouth without asking for a raise."

"A bride wears white," said the speaker, "as a symbol of happiness, for her wedding day is the most joyful day in her life."

"And why do men wear black?" someone asked.

"The energetic traveling salesman, eager to see a big business executive, finally blundered his way past the various secretaries at the end of a rush day in the office."

"Salesman, sir?" murmured the big man. "Do you know my secretaries have thrown out 13 salesmen already today?"

"Yes, sir," said the salesman. "I'm them."

Ernest—"Mother, when the fire goes out, where does it go to?"
Mother—"My dear Ernest, I don't know. You might just as well ask me where your father goes to when he goes out."

"What sort of a dog is he?"
"An entomologist."

"But an entomologist is a collector of insects."

"Well, he does that all right."

Visitor—"A hundred years old! Well, that's a wonderful record. I suppose you folks are very proud of him."

"Sister—"Oh, I duno. He ain't done nothing 'cept grow old, and look how long it took him to do."

Coyote Hunt May Become To Saskatchewan Farmers What Fox Hunt Means To The British

DISLEY, Sask.—The coyote hunt someday may mean to the Saskatchewan farmer what the fox hunt means to the British. Saskatchewan's first organized coyote hunt was held here recently and all agreed—except the coyotes—that it was an artistic success.

A carnival spirit hit this small town, 30 miles northwest of Regina, for the two-day hunt. More than 400 men, armed with shotguns, took part in the organized drive, and more than one thousand persons turned up to kibitz.

The two-day bag of coyotes was 17 or 18—one was quite sure because of the great number of hunters. Although this total was not as high as had been hoped for, farmers consoled themselves with the knowledge that they had made many mistakes which they will not repeat.

Farmers in this district decided to do something about coyotes because the dog-like animals were attacking poultry and livestock. A local scoutmaster, H. G. Ellis, and Farmer R. H. Seidler laid down the strategy. Knowing little about the rules of war against coyotes, Ellis and Seidler admitted they made lots of strategic mistakes.

For example, on the first day of the hunt, the men bit off more than they could chew. Many hunters were in the field attempting to surround an area 12 miles square and drive the coyotes into the centre. "Lots of coyotes slipped through the line," Ellis complained. "At one point seven animals got through."

Still the hunters brought back about 12 animals.

On the second day more than 100 men took part. This time they employed a different strategy because they were hunting in a valley. Ellis and Seidler had a fixed three-mile line of men with moving flankers on each side to drive the coyotes into the line. This method netted about five animals, or about one for every 20 hunters taking part.

Ellis explained that for this maneuver he had 21 men to the mile. "But we should have had at least 40," he said, "because lots of coyotes escaped between the men."

Ellis said the men gathered at the hotel here and were taken to their starting points in a truck. They started hunting before noon and kept at it till dark. During that time they ate only a few sandwiches which they prepared before starting out.

Ellis did not believe there would be another coyote hunt here this fall, but he was already planning for next year.

"We're new at this business," he said, "and we have lots to learn. We must have co-operation from all hunters and that will take a while."

He said bounds were used in the first hunt, and an airplane took part in the first day's operations. A pilot handled the plane while a hunter kept an eye for coyotes. Ellis thought perhaps the bounds and the air support could be used to better advantage.

On the whole, though, he was satisfied with the performance here. He believed the organized hunt would mean a significant victory against the coyote throughout Saskatchewan. He also thought it was a great sport, and amateur sport at that, for there's no bounty on the coyote in this province, and coyote skins at this time of year are worth about 50 cents.

There was only one thing bothering Ellis and Seidler and that was how they were going to collect the $100 each it took them to organize the expedition?

Plans Diamond Drilling In Sask.

Assays of radioactive material sent by Northern Uranium Ltd. to Dominion government radioactivity laboratory in June this year showed some encouragement, according to company officials, with one group being reported "encouraging for prospecting" and another "of possible ore grade" running from 1 to 6.88 per cent uranium oxide.

R. H. Havard, managing director, outlined for Canadian Finance the program which Northern intends to carry out this winter. Dr. G. McCarty has been retained as consulting geologist. After ice becomes strong enough to carry the weight of equipment the company proposes carrying out a program of offshore diamond drilling and subsurface work on the main Gulf showing. A crew will also be put in to explore more fully the surface showings lying inland. Northern's claims are in the Black Lake district of northern Saskatchewan—Canadian Finance.

Boy Rescued From Attack Of Deer Deer

VICTORIA, B.C.—An unidentified boy, about seven years old, narrowly escaped death in an encounter with a 200-pound buck deer in Beacon Hill park here.

Screams of "save me, please save me" from the deer enclosure brought two park sightseers—Robert Chambers and Victor Buchko—to the boy's rescue.

They found the child lying on the ground, with the deer's antlers straddling his body. The bucking animal had pushed the screaming child along the ground against some bushes. Chambers and Buchko grabbed the deer by the antlers and released the boy. They used their belts to tie the animal's horns around a tree. The hysterical boy climbed back over the fence and disappeared.

All joints are welded and the bottom runners of the stands are curved somewhat like a sled runner to allow the drum to be tipped on its end after a quantity of oil has been drawn from it. A fairly heavy strap of iron is welded across the end of the stand against which the bottom of the drum rests. Also, light flat iron strips are bent to the shape of the barrel across the top of the stand and welded at the end.

To use this stand the drum is set on end and tilted up to allow the stand to be slid under the end, then the drum is simply tipped with the stand, placing it in a horizontal position so that all oil can readily be drawn from the faucet in the end. The drum
